CONFERENCE PROGRAMME

President's Welcome

A chairde, cuirim fáilte chugaibh a tháinig ógach cúinne den domhain mór anseo go Corcaigh na gCuan don chomghdháil idirnáisiúnta seo de chuid an ACIS. Is mór an onóir dúinn go bhfuil an chomghdháil seo i gCorcaigh agus in Éirinn agus táim cinnte go mbeidh díospóireacht bhreágaibh agus guím gach rath ar an obair thábhachtach sin.

It is indeed a great honor to welcome you to Cork and to our 56th annual meeting of the American Conference for Irish Studies. Thanks to the amazing work of our colleagues here in University College Cork, we have a diverse and exciting programme to offer throughout the week. As our founders recognized, those who study Ireland and the Irish Diaspora in North American colleges and universities benefit enormously from sharing our ideas with each other and with our colleagues from around the world. If we are to ensure that Irish Studies secures its place in the academy, which is after all our essential mission, it is critical that we learn from and test each other's ideas. And I look forward to the conversations and intellectual sparks we will set off in the coming days.

Tim McMahon, Marquette University

Welcome to Cork

We are delighted to welcome you to University College Cork. Tá áthas orainn fáilte a chur romhaibh go Coláiste na hOllscoile, Corcaigh.

In inviting papers on the conference theme ‘Environments of Irish Studies’, we were conscious of the ways in which ecological concerns have reshaped our own scholarly environments. This year’s programme is a testament to how issues such as climate change, diminished biodiversity, and the interconnectedness of ecological and cultural preservation, have moved steadily to the centre of Irish Studies. As a result, both literary texts and historical events are being interpreted anew and we look forward to hearing new work in these fields during the week.

We also asked ACIS members to understand and respond to the question of ‘environments’ in its widest sense. As a result, the political, historical, linguistic and cultural forces that surround and shape Irish Studies will all form part of discussions this week. The scope of this conference has also been determined by significant anniversaries, including the centenaries of women’s suffrage, the Armistice and the transformative general election of 1918, as well as the twentieth anniversary of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement of 1998.

By meeting here, we have a valuable opportunity to reflect on how people involved in Irish Studies can navigate, and intervene in, the contemporary scholarly and political environments of an increasingly connected world. Our conversations will be inflected by the role of Irish and Irish-descended people in recent political developments in America, by the place and future of Ireland in a post-Brexit archipelago and Europe, and by the recent affirmation of a woman’s right to choose in Ireland.

The campus on which this conference takes place is the first in the world to be awarded the International Green Flag for Environmental Friendliness. It is situated in a distinct physical landscape whose long history and striking beauty are shaped by its characteristic sandstone ridges and limestone valley floors, and by its location on the southern coast of an island at the edges of a continent and an ocean. We hope that this year’s ACIS will lead to an increased appreciation for this shared natural environment, as well as for the creative and intellectual life that this culturally vibrant region has fostered. Thank you for coming to Cork, and we hope you enjoy your time here.

The ACIS 2018 Conference Committee:

Call for Papers

In “Nineteen Hundred and Nineteen,” W. B. Yeats asked, “But is there any comfort to be found? / Man is in love and loves what vanishes./ What more is there to say?” The old world had ended, and a new one was beginning. The year 1919 witnessed the first meeting of Dáil Éireann, the start of the Irish War of Independence, the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, the publication of several episodes of Ulysses in The Egoist, the release of the expanded version of Yeats’s The Wild Swans at Coole, and Éamon de Valera’s dramatic visit to America, among many other notable events. It was, in short, a year of treaties, transitions, and tearing away, a time when Irish writers, artists, historians, intellectuals, political parties, and social movements faced the realities of a continent beginning to recover from the Great War and a nation still fighting for independence.

In the centenary year of these events, we invite ACIS members to gather in Boston, birthplace of the American Revolution and self-styled capital city of Irish America, to reflect on the 1919 era, its legacies throughout the twentieth century, and its resonances within the twenty-first. We welcome papers and panel proposals in all areas of Irish Studies, with particular interest in topics related to independence, transitional moments, and negotiated treaties or agreements.

Possible topics might include but are not limited to:

- Formulations of political and/or artistic independence
- Negotiated spaces
- Contested territories
- Peace agreements or broken treaties
- Women’s rights
- Domestic revolutions
- Sexual orientation and transgender identities
- Religious differences and interdenominational collaborations
- Poetic statements of community or individualism
- Literary portrayals of individual and collective independence
- Dramatic representations of rebellion on stage or screen
- Ireland, America, and Paris
- Brexit and devolution
